Announcements

From NAMI Club: September 10th is World Suicide Prevention Day. We wear yellow on this day to commemorate those who have passed and love those who have tried taking their lives. The use of the color yellow on World Suicide Prevention Day stems from the death of Mike Emme in September 1994. Mike, who was just 17 years old, owned a 1968 Ford Mustang which he had restored himself and had painted bright yellow. After news of Mike's death spread throughout the community, his family and friends decided to use the color yellow, the color of his beloved Mustang, to pay tribute to him and it's something that has remained present to this day. The color yellow is significant and we all wear it today to support those that struggle and show solidarity in the importance of mental health.
